

Check Websites That Offer
Historical or Genealogical Societies in The Area You Are Researching

7 Tips for step 14 - Check Websites That offer Historical or Genealogical Societies in the area you are Researching

When conducting family history research, historical and genealogical societies can be a valuable resource. They often provide access to local records and information that may not be available elsewhere. Here are some tips for finding and utilizing historical and genealogical societies in the area you are researching:

1. Search online: The first step in finding historical or genealogical societies in your research area is to search online. Use search engines like Google to find societies in your target location. Make sure to include the name of the town, city, or county in your search terms.
2. Check genealogy websites: There are many genealogy websites that have directories of historical and genealogical societies. Some popular websites include Ancestry.com, FamilySearch.org, and MyHeritage.com.
3. Check with local libraries: Local libraries often maintain collections of historical and genealogical records and may have information on local societies. They may also have partnerships or affiliations with these organizations, which can provide additional access to resources.
4. Attend events: Many historical and genealogical societies host events, such as lectures or workshops, that can provide valuable information on local history and genealogy research. Attending these events can also provide opportunities to meet other researchers and share information.
5. Join the society: Consider becoming a member of a historical or genealogical society in the area you are researching. Membership can provide access to exclusive resources, such as databases, publications, and research assistance from experienced members.
6. Volunteer: Historical and genealogical societies often rely on volunteers to maintain their collections and organize events. Volunteering can provide opportunities to gain experience in genealogy research and access to resources not available to the general public.

7. Look for smaller organizations: In addition to larger historical and genealogical societies, smaller local organizations may also have valuable information and resources. Be sure to search for organizations specific to the town or county you are researching.

By utilizing the resources available through historical and genealogical societies, you can gain a better understanding of the lives of your ancestors and the communities they lived in. Take advantage of these organizations and the wealth of information they provide to further your research and discover more about your family's history.

Quiz - Step 14 - Check Websites That offer Historical or Genealogical Societies in the area you are Researching'

1. What is the first step in finding historical or genealogical societies in your research area?
  - a. Check with local libraries
  - b. Attend events hosted by historical and genealogical societies
  - c. Search online
  - d. Join the society

2. Which genealogy websites have directories of historical and genealogical societies?
  - a. Ancestry.com
  - b. FamilySearch.org
  - c. MyHeritage.com
  - d. All of the above

3. What information may local libraries have on historical and genealogical societies?
  - a. Exclusive databases
  - b. Partnerships with societies
  - c. Collections of records
  - d. All of the above

4. What benefits can membership in a historical or genealogical society provide?
  - a. Access to exclusive resources
  - b. Research assistance from experienced members

- c. Publications
- d. All of the above

5. What can volunteering with a historical or genealogical society provide?

- a. Access to resources not available to the general public
- b. Opportunities to gain experience in genealogy research
- c. Opportunities to organize events
- d. All of the above

Answers: Quiz - Step 14 - Check Websites That offer Historical or Genealogical Societies in the area you are Researching'

1. c. Search online
2. d. All of the above
3. d. All of the above
4. d. All of the above
5. d. All of the above